The Night the Lights Went Out

Last winter, I was studying for a maths test at my friend Noa's apartment. It was raining heavily and the wind was blowing hard. Noa's little brother was watching cartoons in the living room, and her parents were cooking dinner. Suddenly, all the lights went out. Noa screamed, the TV stopped, and the whole building went silent.

While Noa was looking for a flashlight, I opened the window. Our neighbours were standing on their balconies and shouting. Then I noticed something strange: one apartment across the street still had light. A man was sitting at his window and playing the guitar. We didn't know why his electricity was working. Later, we found out that he had a generator.

When the electricity came back an hour later, we weren't studying anymore. We were singing along with him. I didn't do well on the test, but I remember that night better than anything I learned for it.
